

The Master's degree program Business Education combines content from the fields of business studies, business education, and the humanities and social sciences. Compared to the other Bavarian locations (Bamberg, Munich), Nuremberg is the largest and the oldest location for the training of business educators. Nationally, Nuremberg is one of the most important locations.

The Master's degree program combines content from the fields of business studies, business education, and the humanities and social sciences. It is designed to follow on from Bachelor's degree programs in business studies.

According to the German law on teacher training (Lehrerbildungsgesetz), it is equivalent to the first State Examination in teaching and therefore qualifies graduates to start teacher training (Referendariat) to become teachers at vocational schools specializing in business studies.

For further information, please visit the German WiSo website or the degree programs website.

This degree program is taught in German. Therefore, a good knowledge of German is an essential prerequisite to successfully completing the degree program. Proof of German language proficiency at DSH 2 level or equivalent is required for admission.

The Master of Business Education has a standard period of study of 4 semesters.

The study plans for area I and II can be found here.

More detailed information on the individual modules (e.g. which individual courses have to be taken) can be found in the module handbook for the Master. The modules of the requirements for lateral entrants (see under Application/Admission) can be found in the Bachelor Module Handbook. The entry page for both module handbooks can be found at the following link.

The Master's degree program has a particularly strong focus on Area I, while the Bachelor's degree program in Business Studies with a specialization in Business Education focuses on Area II. The Master's degree program in Business Education includes compulsory teaching placements at vocational schools. Students are prepared for the content and organization of this practical phase at the University. The requirements for the practical phase are clearly regulated and include observation, as well as developing, implementing and reflecting upon their own solutions. Students' performance in this practical phase is evaluated in collaboration with teachers. The School of Business and Economics regularly exchanges information with the schools that host students on teaching placements. This close collaboration is based on a long tradition.
